The Babysitter

Version by Tamara Kula

When my aunt asked me to babysit my three cousins on Saturday, I was a little hesitant. I know that my cousins are always getting in trouble and misbehaving. But my aunt begged me. "Please say you can watch the kids!" she said. "I know you're very responsible and I really need to take a trip on Saturday."

"Well, OK," I responded with a sigh. My aunt was so pleased that she gave me a big hug.

When I showed up at my aunt's house on Saturday, I was amazed to see six children! "They have a few classmates here today so they won't get bored," my aunt explained. The minute my aunt left, my youngest cousin Jeff burst into tears. "I want my mommy!" he cried. Then my other cousin Bill kicked his sister Angela. "Bill's picking on me!" Angela said, and she pulled Bill's hair to get revenge. The other three kids were also acting out, running around and screaming.

"OK, listen everyone!" I demanded. "Pay attention! I am in charge here, and if you don't behave, I will punish you! Now, let's go to the park and play."

Jeff was still sniffing. "I don't want to go to the park!" he complained. "I'm hungry!"

"Yeah, we're hungry too!" shouted the others and all the kids ran into the kitchen like a herd of elephants. I started to clean the living room, but then I heard the sound of something breaking in the kitchen. I ran to check on the kids. "What happened?!" I demanded, looking at the broken glass on the floor.
